Mexico City is one of the most polluted cities in the world. It has been said that Mexico City's air has gone from being one of the world's cleanest to one of the world's most polluted. Unfortunately, the worst problem gripping the city is the massive cloud of smog that hangs over it almost every day. Mexico City has the highest level of ground level ozone in the world, according to the World Health Organization.

There are mountains all around the city and there is not much wind, so the pollution is not blown away. The people of Mexico City have tried to cut the pollution out. They have moved the factories outside the city. They have planted more trees to produce oxygen and keep the air clean. There are new traffic rules so that there are fewer cars on the city roads. They put signs of different colours on all the cars. So there are some colours of cars for every day.

London also used to have the same problem as Mexico. Now drivers have to pay money to drive into the centre of London during working hours. This has succeeded in reducing the number of drivers who come into London every day. Many people now use buses and trains instead of their own cars.
